

ROSS WORKMAN

WINE EDUCATOR

Ross is a recovered lawyer who might never have gone to Stanford Law School had he known how much fun it is working in a winery. He worked as a lawyer, lobbyist, CFO, CEO and utility infielder in the US and overseas for a number of famous and infamous energy companies before managing to get fired amicably from Enron in 1990, before it got really wild and crazy there. Since virtually nobody retires and moves to Houston, Ross and his wife sold their home there and spent 18 months searching the world for the perfect place to live. They settled in Napa in 1996 for the climate, proximity to San Francisco and Lake Tahoe ski slopes, and because it is the source of his absolute favorite lunch and dinner beverage. After several wine classes at Napa Valley College and stints at 4 or 5 other wineries, Ross arrived at Pina in 2009.
